What is a Veterans Treatment Court Program?

Veterans Treatment Court Programs offer eligible defendants who are veterans of the armed services with substance dependency or mental illness a specialized criminal specialty docket that is coordinated with specialized service.

Specialty dockets are those which:

- Require more than simply the adjudication of discrete legal issues,
- Present a common dynamic underlying the legally cognizable behavior,
- Require the coordination of services and treatment to address that underlying dynamic, and
- Focus primarily on the remediation of the defendant in these dockets.

Veteran – A current or former member of the active duty military, national guard, or reserves without consideration of deployment status, combat experience, legal veterans status, or GI Bill use.¹

Participants deemed eligible for VTC docket may not have received "Veteran" status by the US Department of Veterans Affairs or their respective states.

Authorization & Oversight

- Specialty dockets must seek authorization with the Supreme Court of Virginia to operate
- Application process developed
- Operating Standards created
11 standards distill the best of research and practice into standards that foster high-quality programming and accountability for Veterans Treatment Court Programs
- Advisory Committees established by the Chief Justice

Key Offerings

Veterans Treatment Court Programs are not a "get out jail free card" for veterans. They are to provide treatment resources for veterans who are high risk for recidivism and high need for treatment as determined by an objective screening tool.

- Must have identified treatment needs that can be met by the program and a willingness to engage in the services provided.
- Provides veterans with intensive treatment and other services while holding them accountable to the court, society, their families and themselves
- Frequent court appearances and random drug tests
- Rewards for positive behavior and sanctions for negative

Mentors

The active involvement of mentors throughout a participant's treatment increases the likelihood that the participant will remain in treatment.
